

Francais-Glosa 1000 (Artificial Languages Edition)

Glosa, an international language, is a modification of Interglossa by the late Professor Lancelot Hogben. It is designed to be easy to learn, with no complicated grammar and words which are already internationally familiar. Glosa does not aim to replace the Euro-languages - or the other 5000 or so languages of the world - but it should help those who wish to communicate quickly and easily and to co-operate with people from other cultures. It also offers many educational advantages. As the vocabulary is based on international Latin and Greek roots, it offers the added educational advantage of helping students to learn the vocabularies of the Euro-languages, and often stimulates them to start studying another Euro-language other than their own. This dictionary translates 1500 French words into Glosa 1000 Central Vocabulary. Many of the words in the Glosa column are accompanied by an etymological hint which should make the word familiar and memorable. For example, acheter is translated into Glosa as merka, as in the French word, mercantile; lancer is translated into Glosa as bali, as in the French word balistique. Phrases in parallel text show how to use the items of Glosa Mechanics - forming questions, tenses, comparisons, plurals and so on. There is also a short story in parallel text - L'Elixir du Reverand Pere Gaucher from Lettres du mon Moulin by Alphonse Daudet.
